The Problem

Sunday, 11:40 PM. A form fill.

'3 BHK in Baner, budget 1.4 Cr, want to visit this week.' It lands in a shared inbox with 30 other enquiries. Your team calls on Tuesday afternoon. By then he has seen two flats with another broker.

The Workflow

Website Lead Qualifier

Every box below is a node in the free workflow.

Step 1

Catch the enquiry in seconds

Your website form posts straight to n8n. The visitor sees 'thanks' at once, the details are cleaned up (phone with 91, email in lowercase), and bots, test entries and link-stuffed messages are dropped.

Step 2

Check if you already know them

n8n looks the person up in your Leads sheet. Someone who enquired in the last 7 days is not scored or emailed again. Their row is updated as a repeat enquiry, so your team sees they came back.

- Look up by email or phone
- New? Goes on to Claude
- Enquired 3 days ago? Marked 'came back'
- No double emails

Step 3

Claude scores hot, warm or cold

Claude reads the message against your ideal customer: need, budget, timeline and location. It returns hot, warm or cold with reasons and drafts a personal reply. Every lead is logged in your sheet.

Step 4

Hot leads get a call link in a minute

Hot leads get a short email with your booking link within a minute, and you get a Slack ping with their number to call now. If the email fails, the alert gives you the number instead.

Step 5

Warm leads wait for your OK

Warm leads get Claude's personal reply only after you approve it in Slack. Cold leads go to a nurture list instead of the bin. Every contacted lead is marked in the sheet with the time.

What Changes

Before and after the workflow

BEFORE

- Enquiries wait till Tuesday
- Hot and cold treated the same
- Repeat visitors look new

AFTER

- Hot leads hear back in a minute
- You call the right ones first
- Every enquiry scored and logged

STAYS HUMAN

Only the fixed booking-link email goes out on its own. Every personal reply waits for your tap in Slack.
